

Primary Care Psychiatry / Behavioral Health Integration Fellowship

The goal of the National Research Service Award (NRSA) Primary Care Psychiatry/Behavioral Health Integration Fellowship is to train physicians and clinical psychologists working at the interface of mental health and primary care who will become academic leaders in primary care/mental health integration research. The program combines mentored research experience, professional development and coursework at the nationally renowned UW School of Public Health, including the option of completing a Master of Public Health.

Program fellows receive:

- ✓ Two to three years of mentored research training with a mentoring team aligned to fit your goals
- ✓ Personalized coaching in grantspersonship, grant writing support, and faculty feedback during works-in-progress seminars
- ✓ Opportunities to work in clinical settings relevant to research interests
- ✓ Moonlighting opportunities within the University of Washington Medicine system

The increasingly diverse Program faculty come from the departments of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences (Division of Population Health), Pediatrics and Family Medicine, as well as affiliated organizations such as Seattle Children's Hospital, the Puget Sound VA Health Care System and the Kaiser Permanente Washington Health Research Institute.

Program Success

The majority of program graduates have secured academic teaching and research positions in Psychiatry, Family Medicine or Pediatrics and many have developed independent federal-, state- or foundation-funded research programs in mental health services and disparities research.

Our intention is to create a community that encourages participation and connection and values each individual's unique contributions regardless of socioeconomic status, race, culture, ethnicity, language, nationality, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity and expression, spiritual practice, geography, mental and physical status or age.
